the brand that bottled mom's secrets - Inde wild

task 01
competitor analysis

KANISHK TRIKHA

A competitor deep dive on indē wild, Diipa Khosla's Ayurvedistry hair & skin care brand, and what d'you can borrow from its playbook.

indē wild

Generational wisdom • Expert formulated • Clinically proven

MOM'S
SECRETS
IN A BOTTLE

why inde wild?
honestly? i'm obsessed

This was literally the first brand that came to mind (and I don't even use their products).

The marketing is genius, and it's the perfect playbook for d'you to follow.

The core theme everything revolves around is RAW and GENUINE. The founder and face, Diipa Khosla, is an established model and creator who's perfect for it. She doesn't come off as just another model-turned-founder. She is who she is, and she commands knowledge and respect.

RAW.

GENUINE.

the brand at a glance
pillars, tone, formats, look

content pillars
Heritage & ritual (mom, champi, generational wisdom) • Founder in the frame • Launches as cultural moments • Creators & community

tone of voice
Warm, cheeky and confident. Unabashedly desi yet Premium representing the Global Girl.

formats
Hair oiling & GRWM reels, founder-led campaign shoots, creator unboxings, PR box drops, IRL moments (hello Tyla concert) and scrapbook carousels.

visual language
Sun-warmed golds and browns, long thick hair as the hero shot, nostalgic scrapbook textures. Then it flips to loud campaigns with are unbashedly chic and modern.

diipa isn't the founder face
she IS the brand

She's the face alongside her mom, whose long thick hair builds instant trust for everyone watching. Diipa is selling her mom's secrets in a bottle.

It's positioned as a beautiful mother-daughter mission to bring South Asian beauty secrets to a global audience. Raw, genuine, and the central brand identity SELLS

.

She's not afraid to become part of the campaigns herself. Her modelling experience helps, and she's stunning and commanding in every single one.

Honestly, I'd argue they don't need another face.

5 patterns
that drive the engagement

01 mom-daughter is an identity, not a tactic
These campaigns show up regularly, not once in a blue moon. Mom's long hair is always the centre of the video.

02 desi nostalgia core
Reconnects modern Indians and NRIs with their roots, with their own memories of champis in the village with the women of the family. They're no longer embarrased of their cultural practices and identiy- they own it, love it and live it.

03 the 'oriental dream'
For the foreign audience, it's an heirloom ritual they're being let in on. It screams premium trust.

04 brown diva core, with non-desi creators too
Not just repackaged desi identity. Non-desi influencers use it as part of their daily routine, so it works both ways.

05 nothing blends in Every campaign is eye-catching and unique. It stands out, it's easy to remember, and that's the whole point.

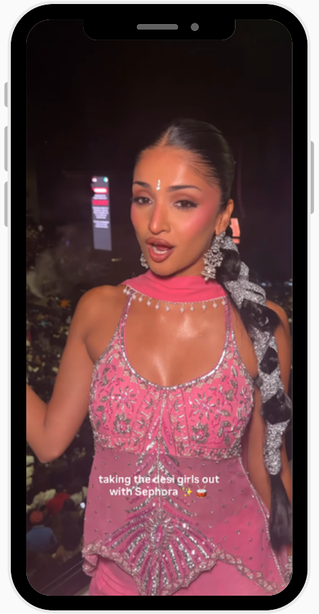

Mom daughter is CORE

non desi positioning as well ++

desi nostalgia core

Brown Diva energy representing the modern desi girl

KANISHK TRIKHA

unabashedly indian
yet premium & luxe

the India Modern woman
In touch with her roots but a global citizen. She sees her own family's champi rituals in every reel. She sees that as a desi girl, she can be both cultural and unbashedly chic.

the western woman
Marketed to in exactly the same way. She gets the same premium goodness, with a ritual that feels like an heirloom.
The oriental charm works like magic.

One brand, two audiences. This multi-faceted identity works in a very unique way.

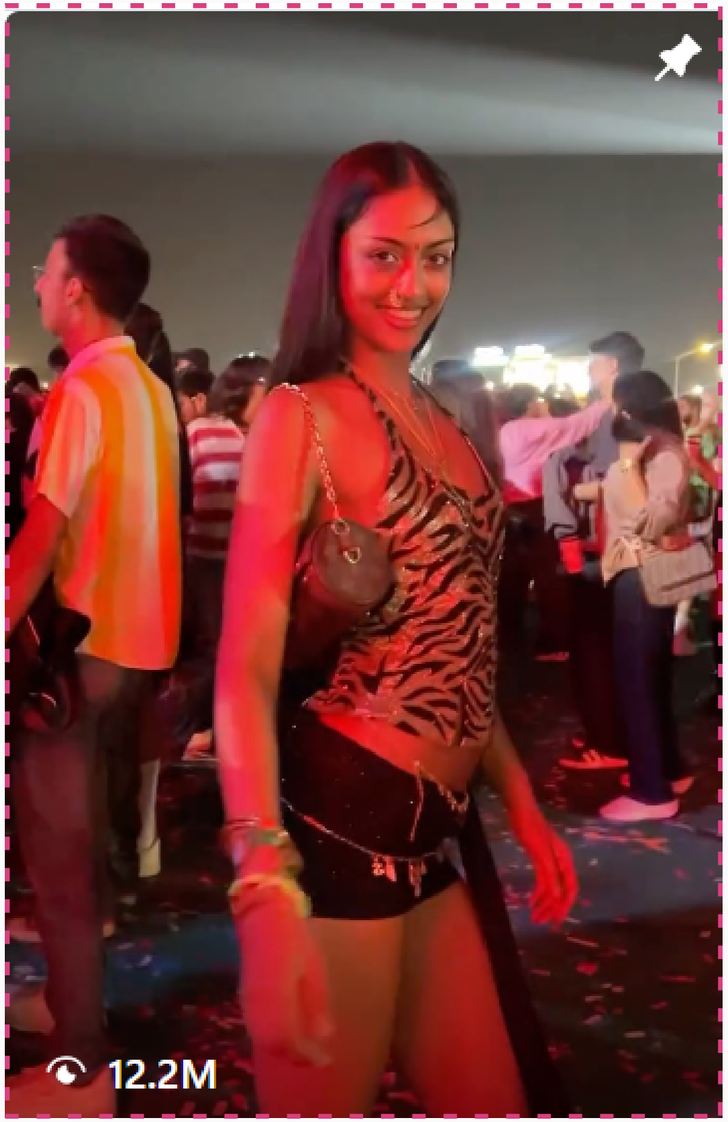

standout #1
the tyla concert

Unarguably the best campaign. Not even a paid partnership with Tyla lol, yet they nailed catching the attention.

Just a few hot girls going to a Tyla concert with indē wild lip gloss? Wrong.

They used the concert to push their lip line through their influencers, and it went so viral it ignited a conversation on race, beauty and stereotypes. There were legit X threads on the video: 'India has baddies??'

why it worked: they borrowed a cultural moment instead of paying for one, and the product rode on a conversation way bigger than lip gloss.

standouts #2 & #3
you can feel these ones

the plumper that dropped as hot sauce

The logo suddenly turned red, then boom, a DLT Plumper disguised as actual hot sauce. Spicy PR boxes, creator unboxings, an all-red launch.

mom's hair, every single time

The mother-daughter hair oiling reels. Mom's long thick hair is always the centre of the video.

why it worked: You feel the tingle before you even try it. Same sensory play as NYX × Shake Shack: the packaging does the explaining.

why it worked: Proof without a single claim. Mom's hair is the before-and-after that years of champi built, and it pulls straight at nostalgia.

beyond selling
building a tribe of baddies

★ Campus Collective
US college students become indē wild storytellers. No follower count needed, just "a strong POV and a little wild in you". Customers turn into creators.

★ an identity you join
"Become the next IW baddie" turns the brand into a club you want in on, not just a checkout page.

★ launches that start conversations
From the Tyla X threads to creator unboxings, people talk about indē wild, not just buy it.

★ heritage as common ground
Every champi reel pulls people back into their own memories with the women in their family.

one thing for d'you

put the founder in the frame

Diipa doesn't just run indē wild, she feels like indē wild herself.

And d'you already has the story: a lawyer who booked a one-way ticket to Korea and cold-called labs until they said yes. That belongs in the campaigns, not just the interviews.

founder-led,
not
founder-
mentioned.

3 ideas to borrow
and make d'you's own

01

"Objection!"

Shamika, the lawyer turned founder, cross-examines viral skincare myths on camera.

borrowed from: Diipa being the brand

why: Puts the founder in the frame and turns d'you's science-first voice into a personality.

02

mom's routine vs mine

Moms and daughters swap routines. What mom got right, and what science adds.

borrowed from: the mother-daughter campaigns

why: Same nostalgia and trust, told in d'you's honest, science-led language. Never preachy.

03

the case file drop

The next launch arrives as a sealed case file with the evidence inside: actives, %, lab notes. Creators open the case on camera.

borrowed from: the hot sauce plumper

why: "Results over marketing" turned into a moment people actually want to film.

the playbook
in one line

What d'you can take from it:
Don't just sell what's in the bottle. Sell who's behind it, where it comes from, and the moments people want to be a part of.

★ thank you ★